

PERFECT PLANS FOR BIG JOINT CELEBRATION

The Band Association members of the Frankfort, New Lenox, Tinley Park and Mokena school bands met in the Frankfort school auditorium this week to discuss and perfect plans for their second annual Field Day to be held in the Frankfort Grove the afternoon and evening of July 2nd. Every committee was well represented and presented their plans for the approval of the Association.

The entertainment committee had an abundance of advertising material lined up.

The most exciting feature of the celebration will be a balloon ascension and parachute jump and several stunts performed by daring aerialists while suspended from a balloon at an elevation of 700 feet. These acts are to be held between 7 and 8 p. m. This will be followed by a balloon ascension to 10,000 feet to be made by Pat Hathaway, the only cowboy balloonist in the world.

The concessions committee has not completed its plans, but have in mind a large variety of interesting booths and plenty of good refreshments.

The dance committee has engaged the well known Gene Victor and his nine piece orchestra to again furnish their delightful dance music for an evening of tripping the light fantastic.

Orioles Win Over Demons 6 to 9

Last Sunday the Mokena Orioles played the Drummond Demons of Joliet. In spite of their name, the Demons are a swell bunch of fellows. The game was a hard fought battle all the way and was marked by a couple of good hot arguments but nothing serious happened.

Umpire John Balaz who was the storm center in a couple of disputes was proven absolutely correct, according to the rule book and the opinion of professional umpires.

It looks like we will lose two of our real players for a while. Harold Cappel and Dick Walsh are leaving for the wheat fields and rolling prairies of Kansas. The team will miss them and as far as I am concerned, it's worse than losing money. The rest of the boys will have to play just that much harder to make up for the loss of these two swell ball players.

We got a real job on our hands Sunday! The Joliet Wizards, an all colored team, came to town and we're really going to have to play baseball, to beat them.

You cant beat a ball game for fun, so come out and enjoy the feud. Win, lose or draw, we'll show you a swell time.

Now every one get down and pray that it will not rain, and be sure to come out for the game.

You cant beat a ball game for fun, so come out and enjoy the feud. Win, lose or draw, we'll show you a swell time.

P. S. We still got one bat left!

C. Houston Goudiss Warns of the Dangers of Overweight

Nationally Known Food Authority Describes the Right and Wrong Methods of Reducing

By C. HOUSTON GOUDISS
6 East 39th Street, New York City.

THERE was a time when overweight was indulgently tolerated and even respected. It was believed that width and wisdom went together and that fat people had the best dispositions. Surplus poundage was regarded as an indication of wealth for it implied that one had plenty to eat and did not have to work.

The modern point of view, backed by medical science, is that overweight destroys beauty, multiplies the chances of disease and subtracts years from your life.

Most of the degenerative diseases of middle life occur more frequently in those who are overweight than in those whose weight is normal. The entire body functions at a disadvantage for the excess fat is present inside as well as outside of the body. Just as the abdomen, hips and arms are burdened with excess fat, so are the internal organs stifled with needless tissue.

Overweight Burdens the Heart

Fatty deposits increase the work of the heart, because each extra pound demands the pumping of additional blood. It has been estimated that every pound of fat requires six-tenths of a mile of blood vessels to nourish it! Thus, the individual who is 20 pounds overweight is carrying around 12 miles of excess blood vessels. Naturally, the heart must work faster and harder to pump blood through these extra miles, and it is not surprising that it is frequently overstrained.

Heart disease and high blood pressure are often associated with excess fat. So are diabetes and kidney disease. And when fat creeps around the abdominal muscles, it may interfere with normal elimination.

Life May Be Shortened

Furthermore, life insurance companies estimate that the more overweight the body becomes, the slighter the chances for longevity. All the data that have been assembled indicate that as age and weight increase, the death rate rapidly accelerates. Gross overweight may shorten life by as much as ten years.

What Should You Weigh?

It is generally held that under the age of thirty, it is advisable to weigh from five to ten pounds more than the average for one's height and age. But after thirty, a weight of ten to twenty pounds below the average is desirable. In fact, leading authorities now agree that it is an excellent plan to endeavor after thirty to maintain the normal weight for one's height at age thirty.

Reducing Methods to Avoid

If you have allowed yourself to become overweight, you should and can reduce. But you must go about it in a scientific manner. Do not put your faith in worthless or dangerous methods that either fail to reduce or may cause you to lose your health faster than you lose weight.

Never take any sort of drugs for the purpose of reducing, except under the advice of your physician. Many drugs which are said to speed up bodily activities and burn up fat may injure the heart, produce cataracts of the eyes, and do other serious damage. Other drugs may have a harmful effect on the kidneys.

The various fad reducing diets which women pass about among themselves are likewise dangerous, because they are usually unbalanced. They may lead to a serious type of acidosis; to nervous disorders, faulty elimination, or deficiency diseases.

Less dangerous, but wholly ineffective, are a variety of salts, soaps, pills and devices said to make fat vanish as if by magic.

It is also a fallacy to believe that rubbing, massaging or pumping will effectively take off weight.

Rational Weight Control

The one scientific method of maintaining normal weight or getting rid of a surplus is to recognize the fundamental fact that all body fat originates as surplus fuel. Thus weight control is chiefly a matter of regulating the diet so that the food intake does not exceed the energy expenditure.

Counting Calories

The person who has become markedly overweight as a result of overeating should put himself in the hands of a physician, but the maintenance of normal weight depends largely upon learning to count calories. Many people are puzzled by the word "calorie," which is a term of measurement used to measure both the fuel value of foods and the body's energy needs.

For example, a tablespoon of sugar furnishes 50 calories; a tablespoon of butter, 100 calories; one-fourth of a large head of lettuce only 12 calories.

The energy requirement for a normal adult man engaged in a sedentary occupation is from 2,200 to 2,800 calories daily; work done standing or walking requires up to 3,000 calories daily. A woman requires from 2,000 to 2,500 calories daily, depending upon her activities.

By becoming familiar with the caloric value of foods, it is possible to construct a well-balanced diet, and at the same time to cut down on fuel values so that you consume less energy foods each day than the body requires. This will force the body to burn some of its own fat for fuel and result in a safe, scientific gradual weight reduction.

I shall gladly send readers of this column a chart showing the caloric value of all the commonly used foods.

You will find that by eating 500 calories less each day than the body expends, you can reduce your weight a pound a week. And with the chart before you, you can cut out 500 calories without even missing them.

Sample Reducing Menus

In planning a reducing program, it is essential to include in each day's diet adequate amounts of the protective foods. To help you plan a balanced diet, a week's sample menus have been included in my Reducing Bulletin.

By keeping your weight down, you may have at least ten years longer in which to enjoy life. In becoming master of your fat, you will truly become master of your fate.

THE SUFFERING SERVANT

LESSON TEXT—Mark 15:22-39.
GOLDEN TEXT—For even the Son of man came not to be ministered unto, but to minister, and to give his life a ransom for many. Mark 10:45.
PRIMARY TOPIC—God's Wonderful Love.
JUNIOR TOPIC—On Calvary.
INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—Self-Sacrifice for Others.
YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—Love's Supreme Sacrifice.

"A Christianity without a dying Christ is a dying Christianity. History shows us that the expansiveness and elevating power of the Gospel depend upon the prominence given to the sacrifice of the Cross. An old fable says that the only thing that melts adamant is the blood of a lamb. The Gospel reveals the precious blood of Jesus Christ, his death for us as a ransom, as the one power that subdues hostility and binds hearts to Him" (Alexander MacLaren).

We consider today that darkest of all days in the history of the world—when wicked men with cruel hearts and hands crucified the loving Son of God. But, thanks be to God, it was also the day when bright hope shone forth for sinful humanity, for in His death Christ bore our sins upon the tree, the veil was rent, the old sacrifices were set aside, and the "new and living way" was opened into the "holiest by the blood of Jesus" (Heb. 10:20).

I. Crucified—That We Might Live (vv. 22-28).

The details of and circumstances surrounding the crucifixion are of deep interest to every Christian. We stand with Luther and weep as we see Christ's unspeakable agony, not only of body but of spirit, and we cry as did Luther, "For me, for me!" How can any believer contemplate the cross and withhold self, substance, or service from Christ?

Equally earnest and heart-searching is the message of the cross to the unbeliever. He knows he is a sinner (Rom. 3:23), he knows that "the wages of sin is death" (Rom. 6:23), and he knows that "neither is there salvation in any other, for there is none other name under heaven given among men whereby we must be saved" (Acts 4:12). Here at the cross he meets that one "who his own self bare our sins in his own body on the tree, that we, being dead to sins, should live unto righteousness: by whose stripes we were healed" (I Pet. 2:24). There were two malefactors who were crucified with Him, and one rallied at Him. The other said, "Lord, remember me when thou comest into thy kingdom"; and Jesus said to him, "Today thou shalt be with me in Paradise" (Luke 23:39-43). Unbeliever, who reads these lines, will you not just now take the eternal life which Jesus died to make possible for you?

II. Forsaken—That We Might Be Accepted (vv. 29-36).

The railing, head wagging, and other abuse that men heaped upon Jesus as He hung on the cross, must have been a grievous thing for His tender loving heart to bear. But it was as nothing compared with that hour when, covered with all the sin and curse of the world, He who knew no sin "was made sin for us" (II Cor. 5:21), and God turned away from Him.

We cannot fathom the full meaning of that hour, we dare not attempt to explain it, we can only accept it and thank God that because He did become sin for us we may be "made the righteousness of God in him" (II Cor. 5:21).

III. A Veil Rent—That We Might Enter (vv. 37-39).

The death of Jesus was not the pitiful weakening of a human martyr. Here was the Son of God, crying with a loud voice (v. 37), giving up His spirit to the Father (Luke 27:46), declaring that the work of redemption was "finished."

As a visible indication of that part—and as a declaration that the old dispensation of law had given place to the dispensation of grace, God tore the temple veil in twain. Only He could have done it. No man could have torn this sixty-foot long, twenty-foot wide, and inch-thick curtain from top to bottom. It had hung in the temple to keep all but the High Priest out of the Holy of Holies, and he entered with fear and trembling but once a year as the representative of the people. Now all this is changed. We have now, "brethren, boldness to enter into the holiest by the blood of Jesus, by a new and living way, which he hath consecrated for us, through the veil." Therefore, let us draw near with a true heart and full assurance of faith" (Heb. 10:19-22).

Homely Simile

He shall cover thee with his feathers, and under His wings shalt thou trust: His truth shall be thy shield and buckler.—Psalms 91:4.

Lofty Companionship

Peter said unto Jesus, Master, it is good for us to be here, and let us make three tabernacles.—Luke 9:33.

Power of Faith

I can do all things through Christ which strengthened me.—Phil. 4:13.

Secrets of Ancients Survive Attacks of Modern Science

With television soon to become serious rival to the movies, and giant airplanes and "press-the-button" warships things which raise little comment from the average man, it is surprising that there are many secrets known to the ancients which have survived the attacks of modern science, says a writer in London Answers.

The Greeks could not weave linen or wool on anything like the scale we weave them today. But they wove them into the pilaema, a form of cuirass which could not be penetrated by the sharpest dart or arrow. The secret has been lost—perhaps forever.

The Romans sank wells for water to great depths. Exactly how they did the boring is unknown.

The beautiful purple dye, known of old, has eluded the dye-makers of today. And modern builders can make nothing of the strong and durable cement used by the Greeks and the Romans in their walls. This cement was stronger and harder than the stone itself.

The knowledge possessed by the ancient Egyptians was very extensive. They had a method of dressing stone to withstand the ravages of time and weather. They also perfected the art of embalming. Probes, forceps, and other surgical instruments have been found in Egypt. For what purpose they were used we will never know.

That secret, along with many others, passed away with the destruction of the famous library at Alexandria in the Fifth century. The loss of the knowledge contained in that library was a blow to civilization.

Reading and Thinking

Reading furnishes the mind only with materials of knowledge; it is thinking makes what we read ours. So far as we apprehend and see the connection of ideas, so far it is ours; without that it is so much loose matter floating in our brain.—Locke.

Must Books Be Read?

The collector of books need not fear the challenge that is sure to be made, sooner or later, by his skeptical acquaintances: "Have you read them all?" The first idea he ought to get out of his head is that he must only buy books for immediate reading.

"The charm of a library," said that devout book lover, the late Arnold Bennett, "is seriously impaired when one has read the whole or nearly the whole of its contents."

Bennett confessed that he had hundreds of books he had never opened, and which, perhaps, he never would open. But he would not part with them. He knew they were good, and as he gazed on them, he said to them, "Some day, if chance favors, your turn will come. Be patient!"

Best Thoughts

Try to care about something in this vast world besides the gratification of small selfish desires. Try to care for what is best in thought and action—something that is good apart from the accidents of your own lot. Look on other lives besides your own. See what their troubles are, and how they are borne.—George Eliot.

WHEN LIFE DEPENDS ON TIRE SAFETY

IT'S ALWAYS Firestone

FOR 19 CONSECUTIVE YEARS THE WINNERS OF THE INDIANAPOLIS 500 MILE RACE HAVE PROTECTED THEIR LIVES WITH FIRESTONE GUM-DIPPED TIRES

On May 30, Floyd Roberts shattered all track records for the 500-mile Indianapolis Race, averaging 117.2 miles an hour using Firestone Gum-Dipped Tires.

THEY said it couldn't be done — that tires could not withstand the torture of the new high speeds. Yet Floyd Roberts set a new record, at this year's Indianapolis Race, averaging 117.2 miles an hour for the 500 miles on Firestone Gum-Dipped Tires.

With the sun-baked brick of the straight-away and the granite-hard surface of the turns pulling and grinding at their tires, 33 daring drivers, every one on Firestone Tires, waged a thrilling battle for gold and glory. Never before have tires been called upon to take such punishment. Never in all the history of the motor car has tire safety been put to such a gruelling test. Yet not one tire failed — not one single cord loosened — because Gum-Dipping, that famous Firestone patented process saturates and coats every cotton fiber in every cord in every ply with liquid rubber counteracting the tire-destroying internal friction and heat that ordinarily cause blowouts.

Why risk your life and the lives of others on unsafe tires? Join the Firestone SAVE A LIFE Campaign today by equipping your car with Firestone Triple-Safe Tires — the only tires made that are safety-proved on the speedways for your protection on the highways.

Prize Winning Recipes To Be Announced Soon

C. Houston Goudiss, who writes our "WHAT TO EAT AND WHY" series, reports that the Cake Recipe Contest which he recently conducted through the columns of this newspaper was a gratifying success.

A tremendous number of recipes were submitted and the home economists on the staff of his Experimental Kitchen Laboratory in New York City have been busy for days testing and tasting almost every imaginable kind of cake. They report that our town has some very fine cake bakers!

They regret that it was impossible to acknowledge individual entries, but they thank every homemaker who entered the contest, and have asked us to say that each recipe will be given the most careful consideration.

Because of the volume of recipes submitted, they will require a little while longer to complete their tests and to arrive at their decision as to the winners.

Prize winners will be reported in these columns in the near future, and as announced at the beginning of the contest, prize winning recipes, together with those receiving honorable mention from the judges, will be printed in a booklet to be distributed nationally.

Don't Get Hurt

Below are given some suggestions for "Safe Gardening" compiled by the National Safety Council:

Replace split, broken or sharp-edged handles. Avoid splinter and other wounds.

Carry any cutting tool with the blade facing downward.

Never leave a hoe, rake or fork lying or standing with the head pointing up.

Get first aid for any cut or scratch, no matter how slight it may seem to you.

Always cut away from you in using a knife.

Never leave a scythe or sickle hanging in a tree. Hang them, heads up, on the wall.

Tools not in use should be placed on shelves, in racks, hung up, or otherwise safely stored in tool sheds, according to their nature.

During the summer months as the great outdoors invite and vacations come, we often times forget God and the church. There can be no vacation from Christ, religion, prayer, public worship and the Word of God. A Christian desires no such vacation. Wherever he goes he takes with him his Savior and his religion for they are essentials of his daily life. Wherever we spend our summer days let us remember to worship
God daily in private Scripture reading and prayer and weekly in the public services of his house.

CHRISTIAN SCIENCE CHURCHES

"God the Preserver of Man" was the subject of the Lesson-Sermon in all Churches of Christ, Scientist, on Sunday, June 12.

The Golden Text was, "As birds flying, so will the Lord of hosts defend Jerusalem; defending also he will deliver it; and passing over he will preserve it" (Isaiah 31:5).

Among the citations which comprised the Lesson-Sermon was the following from the Bible: "Behold, the Lord God will come with strong hand, and his arm shall rule for him: behold, his reward is with him, and his work before him. He shall feed his flock like a shepherd: he shall gather the lambs with his arm and carry them in his bosom, and I shall gently lead those that are weak" (Isaiah 40:10, 11).

The Lesson-Sermon also included the following passages from the Christian Science textbook,
"Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures," by Mary Baker Eddy:
"God is the Life, or intelligence, which forms and preserves the individuality and identity of animals as well as of men" (p. 550).

In King's Drawing Room

During the reign of terror in France in the early 1790s the prisons of Paris presented a scene seldom witnessed in history. In the evening the aristocrats of both sexes assembled in the common jail room—always called by them the drawing room—powdered and elegantly dressed; saluted one another by their former noble names, played cards and chess just as though they were assembled in the king's palace.

Sees Workings of
C. I. O. Convention

The following article was written by H. W. Conrad. Publisher of the Taylor County Star News of Medford, Wisconsin.

Having a couple of hours to spend in De Moines recently, we looked in on "the first Iowa CIO convention attended by about 150 men and women. This was out of curiosity to learn the CIO slant and whatever else possible at first hand, in the same spirit in which we attended any interesting meeting happened onto anywhere in the United States. One thing we got out of the meeting was this: There is no use for CIO opposition to shut its ears to what is going on. There may be only 5 per cent of the aims of the organization debatable by the average American—95 per cent of the resolutions adopted might be acceptable to ladies' aid society but ignoring the move does no good, merely makes the 5 per cent easier of accomplishment when wrapped up with the acceptable 95 per cent.

The presiding officer was an intelligent alert young Iowa Republican who knew his stuff, one of the speakers was Catholic priest from Granger, Iowa; another, a smart negro labor organizer who was said to be communist. The latter was a participant in the Chicago Republic steel trouble Memorial day and he spoke in a highly inflammatory manner about that trouble, along with showing the films of the affair, which Chicago police called "a riot" and the CIO called "a massacre". The priest favored "intelligent and sincere" action by CIO members.

Having heard De Loss Walker assistant editor of Liberty Magazine, talk the other night before from a decidedly contrasting point of view, the CIO meeting was especially interesting. Anyone with an honest disagreement with CIO aims or the means used to reach its ends had better inform himself on the CIO slant and prepare to meet argument with argument. Ignoring the situation will do no good at all.

One common unfairness of almost all speakers is this: They seem able to put into the minds of their listeners the assumption that all workers, all business men, all financiers, all capital, all labor feel one way about any issue brought up. It's a ridiculous assumption but it seems accepted by the listeners, at least for the duration of the speech.

RALPH E. CHURCH

Illinois Representative in Congress

With no definite opposition and without a record vote, the Senate passed a joint resolution to establish a committee to investigate monopolies. It is to be known as the National Economic Committee. It is to have $500,000 to make its study and report. And, under the terms of the resolution as adopted by the Senate, the Committee will consist of 12 members, 6 from the Congress and 6 from the Executive branch of the government.

Of the congressional delegation, 3 Senators will be appointed by the Vice-President and 3 Congressmen will be appointed by the Speaker of the House. As has been customary in the creation of congressional committees, each will no doubt select two Democrats and one Republican to serve.

Of the executive delegation on the Committee the Department of Justice, Department of Commerce, Department of the Treasury, Department of Labor, Securities and Exchange Commission and Federal Trade Commission will each have one representative appointed by the respective heads of those divisions of the government.

In short, there is to be established one of the largest investigating committees ever established by Congress. It is unique not only in its size but also in the fact that it is to have members from both branches of the government. This particular feature met with some opposition in the Senate on the theory that Congress itself should conduct its own investigation and on the ground that it made the committee too large to be effective.

It is worth our while to call attention to the nature of this particular committee. In the coming months the nation will read much about it and its work. It promises to be one of the most extensive investigations into monopolies and monopolistic practices that has ever been made by any body at any time. It has a dual purpose: to arouse public opinion to the nature and extent of monopolies and, secondly, to learn the facts on which to base such supplemental legislation as may be requisite in dealing with the problem.

Clearly, the value of this investigation will be determined by the caliber and temperament of the men appointed to conduct it. Too often we have seen congressional investigating committees diverted from their real purpose by members who have some personal ax to grind or some pet peeve they wish to air publicly. Frequently congressional committees have been made were instruments for political publicity or to create some political smoke-screen. Not infrequently have they launched into punitive attacks on individuals or groups for solely political purposes.

In the President's Message to Congress on April 29 of this year, recommending a "comprehensive study" of monopolies, he said: "This program should appeal to the honest common sense of every independent businessman interested primarily in running his own business at a profit rather than in controlling the business of other men. It is not intended as the beginning of any ill-considered 'trust-busting' activity which lacks proper consideration for economic results." It can be said that the degree of "appeal to honest common sense" of the program will depend upon whether the committee itself exercise "honest common sense" in carrying out its true purpose—to study the facts in an impartial and fair-minded way.

At the present time there seems to be three schools of thought in Congress in connection with monopolies. One group believes that the problem can be solved simply by enacting stiffer penalties. A second group believes that there must be legal reform and that reform should represent amendments to our existing law. And still a third group, representing the most ardent of the anti-monopoly advocates, believe that the only way to deal with the problem is to require every corporation doing business in interstate commerce to secure a Federal license.

Since a committee is being created to study the problem, no doubt the 76th Congress will be called upon to deal with it in some manner.

Streamlined Train Service NOW SPANS COUNTRY

Travelers now may ride from New York to the Pacific Coast by streamlined train. This new Broadway Limited, fleet leader of the Pennsylvania, cuts the New York-Chicago schedule to 16 hours.

Luxurious new diner for the Pennsylvania. It was designed and constructed by the Edward G. Budd Manufacturing Company, famed builders of stainless steel rail cars.

Crowds are attracted by new trains, as evidenced by this group about one of the six Rock Island Rockets.

The Reading Crusader serves Philadelphia and New York with a fast twice-a-day schedule. It, too, is Budd-built of stainless steel.

Two of the famous Burlington Zephyrs are shown here in Chicago's Union Station, ready for a speedy run.

Linking Chicago and the west coast with a 39 1/4 hour schedule, the Santa Fe Super Chief, Budd-built, heads the largest fleet of streamlined trains in the world.

Competent and attractive hostesses aid travelers to enjoy their journey on streamliners. Here is a spacious, comfortable chair car on one of these modern trains.

Paralleling the New York-Chicago service of the Pennsylvania, the New York Central adds this new Twentieth Century Limited. In trial runs this train hit 105 miles an hour.

$500,000,000 goes up in smoke

FOTO-FEATURE

1 In 1884 a mysterious fire started in Ohio's Straitsville coal mining area. It has burned ever since, undermining 24 square miles of land, ruining farms and consuming $500,000,000 worth of coal. In dense woodland areas (above) it sends constant clouds of smoke to the sky, eventually moving on to new, unburned fields.

2 Seventy-five-year-old Mrs. Elizabeth Green, a rural cottager, is among refugees forced to leave their farms. Mrs. Green's home was sinking and her rooms were filled with poisonous gas. Her land naturally became valueless so she now lives in nearby New Straitsville.

3 A keen student of the devastating fire has been New Straitsville's mayor, William Johnson, who daily receives crack-brain suggestions on how to bottle up the 54-year-old flame. But only recently has a sound solution been offered to the mayor, himself an old-time coal miner.

4 Aided by government WPA funds, Straitsville's fire is not being extinguished but is being isolated to prevent consumption of hundreds of millions of tons of coal in fields stretching south, east and north. Three barriers are being built, two of them a mile long, the other a half-mile. Barriers are built by means of tunnels. The above tunnel stretches under Plummer hill. At this point the fire has already reached the barrier and is being checked, unable to burn a path through the earthen fill.

5 When tunnels are completed, fresh dirt is washed down sluice boxes into the excavated barrier, making the crevice air tight. When the tunnels will hold not another grain of dirt the job will be finished, providing a solid earthen wall to stop the half-century-old flame. The above sluice box above the Plummer hill barrier took 30 tons of dirt every eight hours. There were seven more holes in that tunnel. The other two barriers, larger, will be fed by 50 holes each. Dirt is washed into the tunnels.

6 Coal must be removed before the earthen barrier is filled in, so miners are employed. Nor is coal all that must be removed. Water seepage has been a hazard, especially in Shawnee tunnel where four square miles of excavation is under water. Drainage ditches must therefore be dug.

7 As coal and shale are removed from the tunnel, mine cars haul it to the surface where the coal is made available without charge to needy residents of the Straitsville area. When the fire reaches all its barriers, it may still smoulder hundreds of years within its confines, undermining still more land in the stricken area.

8 Superintending the huge project is James R. Cavanaugh, shown here making a periodic inspection to check against explosive or suffocating gases in the tunnels. He carries a flame which lengthens or goes out when there is too much carbon dioxide or carbureted hydrogen for safety.

9 The fire cannot be isolated too soon for Straitsville people who have suffered hardships at its expense. The above well, for example, used to be a seething caldron before the fire moved elsewhere. Eventually the stones cracked and it was rebuilt as a cistern.

10 Highway travelers in the mine fire area often see warning signs like this. In many places the asphalt paving has collapsed after being undermined. Eventually some highways may be moved to safer ground if the flames continue to sap their foundations. The village of old Straitsville, once prosperous, is virtually abandoned.

11 A typical victim is David Rush, farmer. The fire roasted the potatoes in his garden, heated the water in his well and made his chicken coop so hot that hens roosted in the trees. His entire farm looks like this. All this, caused by a tiny spark in 1884!

Cotton Fashions for Mother, Daughter

THESE two designs are particularly good inspirations for summer daytimes—they're cool, simple, becoming, easy to make. The house dress can be made in a few hours, with a diagram, and the jumper frock includes a detailed sew chart, so it's no trouble at all.

House Dress in Large Sizes.

With darts at the waistline and inside tucks on the shoulders, this dress has an unusually good line—trim and slenderizing. Pleats in the short sleeves make them easy to work in. Gingham, seersucker, percale and broadcloth are the best materials for this. Trim it with bright ricrac braid.

Girl's Jumper Blouse Frock.

With a jumper frock in dark cotton and several crisp white blouses, it's easy to keep your young daughter looking fresh and smart—and cuts down on the laundry, too. This style, with its flare skirt and puff sleeves, is the most becoming fashion in the world for girls between six and eighteen. For the jumper, choose shantung, pique, gingham or linen. For the blouse, dimity, organdy or mull.

The Patterns.

1533 is designed for sizes 34, 36, 38, 40, 42, 44, 46, 48 and 50. Size 36 requires 4½ yards of 35-inch material. 1½ yards ricrac braid to trim.

1520 is designed for sizes 6, 8, 10, 12 and 14 years. Size 8 requires 1½ yards of 35-inch material for the blouse; 2 yards of 35-inch material for the jumper.

Send your order to The Sewing Circle Pattern Dept., Room 1020, 211 W. Wacker Dr., Chicago, Ill. Price of patterns, 15 cents (in coins) each.

Sentinels of Health

Don't Neglect Them!

Nature designed the kidneys to do a marvelous job. Their task is to keep the flowing blood stream free of an excess of toxic impurities. The act of living—life itself—is constantly producing waste matter the kidneys must remove from the blood if good health is to endure. When the kidneys fail to function as Nature intended, there is retention of waste that may cause body-wide distress. One may suffer nagging backache, persistent headache, attacks of dizziness, getting up nights, swelling, puffiness under the eyes—feel tired, nervous, all worn out.

Frequent, scanty or burning passages may be further evidence of kidney or bladder disturbance.

The recognized and proper treatment is a diuretic medicine to help the kidneys get rid of excess poisonous body waste. Use Doan's Pills. They have had more than forty years of public approval. Are endorsed the country over. Insist on Doan's. Sold at all drug stores.

Ed Dana put a hand on her shoulder. "You wanted me to know? Well, don't you want me to come to your wedding?"

"Dad, dear!"

"We'll be there, all your brothers and I, and old Penny, of course. I—I doubt if your mother—"

"I know."

"Your mother is pretty set in her ideas, for all she's so gentle. This thing, about Duncan, I mean, goes pretty deep. But I want you to know the rest of us—the boys and I—are satisfied, Sarah Lynn."

She couldn't speak. It was a comfort to have him go on talking.

"We're pretty proud of you, Sarah Lynn, and we like Gunnar. It's fine what the old lady has done for you, just now, when things are pretty lean with me. Of course, we always knew she would remember you substantially, and it wasn't any surprise to find she's left everything to you and Sally Ann. Well, that'll make it nice for the boy. He'll be free to keep right on with the things he's interested in. I'd hate to think of his having to keep his nose to the grindstone," he said. He gave her a hard hug and got quickly into his car.

Sarah Lynn went for a last walk with Miss Pennington, out to their meadow. She dreaded it a little, but the old governess was briskly commonplace. "I wonder at you, really I do," she said severely, "marrying without a new stitch to your name! It would have given me pleasure to mark your things. I cannot help but feel this haste is unseemly."

Sarah Lynn drove herself out to the airport to say good-by to her plane and her friends, young Bill's adoring presence beside her.

"Gee, Sis, some people have all the luck!" he moaned. "Gosh, I wish I was going with you and Gunnar!"

"Bill—this is a secret—cross your heart? Well, you get through high school, and I'll send for you to come over to Norway and learn to fly."

"Gee!" he gasped. "Golly! Hot ziggy! No foolin'?"

No fooling, she pledged him, her heart warm. She did have all the luck, all the love. She felt a great uprush of happy gratitude, an ardent longing to give something away, to do something for somebody.

The Ladybug was to furl her wings for the present. They expected to send for her, after a while. Vance Le Roy was to keep her as the apple of his eye, old Pete on guard as well.

A group gathered about her—Vance Le Roy, old Pete, the mechanics, a few fliers and students to tell her good-by, to wish her happy landings.

Kitty Medill was standing alone by her shabby ship. Kit, poor Kit, she remembered, had been grounded three months for discipline and had just been permitted to fly again. Sarah Lynn waved and Kit answered sullenly.

"Boy!" gasped a student flier. "Are they going to hop the ocean—the two of 'em?"

"They're not doing any broadcasting," Vance Le Roy growled.

Sarah Lynn walked over to the stunt woman. "Hello, Kitty! I'm so glad to see you!" Cool, dark, slim, immaculate, offering her hand.

The hand Kit gave in return was smeared with grease and had a look of chronic as well as temporary soil, but the nails were a gleaming pink. "Well, I'm glad somebody's glad. I'm pretty darn' sick of being in the doghouse. What do they want me to do? Fly this old crate like I was pushing a baby buggy round the park? And now I can have my blue dishes again if I promise to be a good little girl and play gently! The heels! Look at those guys over there now, watching us! You'd think I was Poison Ivy. Don't want their angel child to catch anything off me! Everybody high hating me and—"

"Oh, not everyone, Kitty! I'm glad to see you. I'm glad I can say good-by to you. I—we're flying east—"

"Yeah. Big Swede in a fireman's hat."

Sarah Lynn laughed. "He doesn't wear it any more, Kit, and it's Norway, not—"

"All right, all right; let it go at that. But for all your soft line you wouldn't hop with me on a bet, would you? Sure you wouldn't? There was authentic bitterness in the high voice.

"Why, yes, I would, Kitty!" Sarah Lynn said, her voice warm. "I must be home in a little while, but I'd love to go up for a spin with you. I've never flown with you, have I? But I've seen your stunts in pictures and I think you're wonderful! Bill!"—she called to her hovering brother—"you wait for me. I'll be down in a jiffy."

"Well, let's make it fast then," the stunt flier said.

She taxied down the field and took off smartly. Sarah Lynn thought the inside of the ship looked a good deal like its pilot—shabby, hectic, not quite clean. "Kitty, is your husband—" she began, conscientiously chatty.

"Husband? Listen; all men are dogs," she was circling the field. She looked down. "I bet this burns 'em up—that bunch down there, you flying with Poison Ivy." She began a sudden and reckless climb.

"No, Kit! Why should it?" But Sarah Lynn had an uneasy conviction that Gunnar and Conrad Jordan would sternly disapprove. She knew their feeling about the Kitty Medill type of flier. Why had she come?

"They say I've lost my nerve. Say I'm all washed up. Well, I'm not. I'm just as good as I ever was. I'll show 'em." The small face seemed wholly composed of sulky mouth and stubborn jaw. "I'll show 'em right now. Hang on, kid! We're going to the circus!"

She allowed her plane to stall in level flight, held her joy stick back and her rudder on and went into a violent tailspin.

Sarah Lynn's heart turned over and over. She clutched and clung, thanking her stars that Gunnar was not watching. Could the mad-cap recover? What were the men thinking down on the field, her friends?

Kit closed her throttle, pulled back on her stick, regained her flying speed, straightened out smoothly; a "Everybody's high-hating me and—" brilliant performance. She grinned at her passenger. "All washed up, am I?"

"Of course not! You're marvelous! That was a gorgeous thrill, Kit, but I believe we'd better go down, now."

"Oh, let's take a little ride!" They were shooting skyward again. "Why don't you come up sometime?" She leveled off and headed for the hills.

Sarah Lynn took pains to speak pleasantly, casually. "Kit, this has been great fun, and I'll bear witness that you're a wonder, but I really must be getting back. My brother's waiting and I have a hundred things to do before we leave."

She held the ship doggedly to its course. "Say, listen. I'd be doing you a big favor if I never flew you back to your fireman. You take it from me; they're all heels. I could write a book about 'em, babe. All alike from that ace of yours to the dirty deuce I drew!"

Sarah Lynn achieved a laugh. "But, just the same, I must be getting home, Kit." She was fighting a swiftly growing anxiety, her eyes on the instrument panel, her ears listening earnestly to the motor. There was something about it she didn't like, an alien sound.

They were flying low over the mountains, now.

"Remember that night in Fresno, when the fireman baled you out like a sack of mail?"

"I do, Kitty, and how kind you were to me! I'll never forget it. I've never stopped being grateful, and I've always hoped I could do something for you, sometime." She forced herself to speak steadily.

"Well, you squared it all right when you hopped with me, just now, showing those bums you had confidence—" she broke off, frowning.

Stark terror laid hold of Sarah Lynn. "Kit, what's the matter? Let me fly her! Here, let me! Kit, what's wrong?"

"Just everything, that's all," the stunt flier said, her voice rasped and shrill. "Just everything in the world! Well, what do we care, babe! Stand by for a crash!"

CHAPTER XII

Kitty Medill crawled slowly and painfully out of the wreckage. Her clothing was grotesquely torn and blood ran brightly from cuts on her face and body. She limped unsteadily to a large flat rock at a little distance and sat down, her hands over her eyes, shaking, whimpering cursing.

She kept herself resolutely blindfolded. "It's just a lousy dream," she told herself. "Just a nightmare, like when you eat something awful. Pretty soon I'll wake up." She pressed her hands tighter over her eyes. "I won't look. I'm not going to look till I'm sure I'm awake. Just a lousy dream. I never took her up. I never—" She was on her feet, reeling back to the remnants of her plane.

She screamed when she saw what she was looking for. Sarah Lynn was pinned to the ground, face downward, one hand flung clear, an olive-skinned, sun-tanned hand, delicately muscular and thin with faintly pink nails. In the midst of breakage and tragedy that hand looked normal and comfortable and unworried.

"You're not dead!" the flier addressed her harshly. "You're not dead. I won't let you be dead, do you hear?"

Sarah Lynn did not hear.

Kitty Medill began to weep wildly. She got down to her knees and touched the hand. "I told you you weren't dead!" she triumphed. "Now all I got to do is drag you out." She began a slow and thorough investigation. The weight resting on Sarah Lynn's back was utterly impossible for her to move even the fraction of an inch, and it held her like a vise from her shoulders to her hips. One arm was under her; the other, her legs, her head, were free of encumbrance. "Well, that's all to the good," Kit continued to talk to her. "All I got to do is find something I can use to pry that junk loose so you can wriggle out."

She stood erect and walked unsteadily away. They were on a ledge in a canyon with mountain crests rising all about them. One, higher than the rest, she thought must be Mount Umunhum, named in the Indian days. There were no trees. She stood on a rock to look. There was absolutely nothing which she could use as a lever to pry the load off Sarah Lynn.

She walked back to the smashed ship and took stock. Exploration discovered her flask half full of whiskey, matches, four sandwiches in a tin box. She set her treasures together on a flat stone and turned at a sound. Sarah Lynn was moaning.

Kitty Medill ran to her. "Hello, babe! Okeh?"

"Kit?" a faint whisper came.

"Yeah! Kit's right here!"

"My . . . back . . . Could you lift . . ."

Kit swallowed hard. "Well, you see, kid, it's pretty heavy. I can't quite cut the mustard, alone. But they'll be along now, most any time, and we'll have you out before you know it."

"All . . . right . . ." another sighing whisper answered.

"Sure we will. They were watching us, all those birds at the field. They know the course I took, and when we don't show up, they'll be out after us." She thought Sarah Lynn was asleep.

The whisper came again, "Kit—"

"My back . . . Couldn't you lift it . . . a little?"

She would try, she told her. She did try, frantically, futilely, straining until she was crimson and gasping. "See? Can't make the grade. But just as soon as the boys get here—and they'll bring tools and everything—"

Her passenger did not appear to be listening. After an interval she said, "Water . . ."

The stunt flier managed a very good laugh. "Well, that's the joker. Didn't have any on board, and I dasset go bargaining around looking for a spring and get lost in the dark. But I'll tell you what I have got!" She retrieved the flask.

"No more water round here than you'd find in a speak, but a lil' swig of this'll do you more good anyway!" She crawled as close as possible to Sarah Lynn, slid an arm beneath her head, managed to lift it a few inches and held the liquor flask to her lips, but she coughed and choked. "Well, for Pete's sake, don't waste it! Well, anyway, I'm going to put my handkerchief under your face; keep it off the dirt." She smoothed the square of soiled pink linen and spread it beneath the bruised cheek. "I betcher that feels better!" She stood up and looked down at her for a long moment. "It's just your back that's caught, babe. Arms and legs okeh. Might be a good idea to move your legs once in a while, you know, exercise 'em. Try it, will you?"

Sarah Lynn was motionless.

"Go on, kid! Just to please me? Move your legs!"

Sarah Lynn said, "Are you sure . . . my legs . . . are there? I don't think I have . . . any legs."

"All right," Kit said after a pause. "Let it go. Prob'ly better to just lay still and rest, anyhow, till they come for you."

"Why, I'll bet they're tumbling out to hunt already, planes and people on horseback and Boy Scouts and everything. Don't you fret. I got you into this jam and I'll get you out of it. Sure; the posse's out now, I'll bet, to rescue you and to string me up. Well, see if I care!"

She sat down as near to her as she could get and took hold of the one free hand. Dusk filled the canyon. "Gee, it gets dark fast up here. Like dropping a curtain, or switching off a light. Well, that's all right; sooner it's night the sooner it'll be morning. Just don't you fret yourself, babe. You hear me? Don't you worry."

"I won't . . ." the whisper answered. A bird, somewhere above them, began a plaintive call which consisted of small, sad notes dropped down in groups of four, over and over.

"Oh, cut that out, will you?" Kitty Medill demanded. "We heard you the first time."

When it was completely dark a cold wind came up, and there began to be countless queer and disturbing night noises. She could identify the howling of coyotes but they seemed to be a comfortable distance away. It was the fluttering, the creeping and crawling close by which filled her with sick terror. Owls called eerily to each other. Occasionally she struck a precious match to look at Sarah Lynn, and twice she was able to break off bits of a sandwich and get her to swallow, but what she wanted was water. Kit wanted it herself.

"Wouldn't that slay you?" she thought. "Me—craving water?"

When she found it was useless to try to make Sarah Lynn talk she put her head down on her knees and slept in broken snatches. Good idea for both of them to get their rest; the Big Swede would be after them by daybreak, and after them was right; two ways.

The world was bright with morning light long before the sun made its way into their canyon.

Kit yawned and stretched and got stiffly to her feet. It was crisp and cold and quiet and the sky was serenely blue. Sarah Lynn seemed to be talking to herself.

"Well, good morning!" Kit said raggedly, "if that's what you call it. But it's got the night beat a million miles, anyhow, and—listen! Listen! Planes!" She began to dance up and down, to cry and to laugh. "Babe! Don't you hear 'em? Gee—there they are! Planes—flying over us!" She waved and screamed wildly, but the ships passed over and were gone, though they could still hear them.

Crows, as Pets, Can Be Taught to Talk; Tongues Naturally Split, Expert Asserts

If you are bored with the usual kind of pet and want a new thrill, get a crow, and while teaching him to talk, teach him various tricks, writes Medora Hamilton Crist in the Baltimore Sun. You will never tire of him, for he will do something surprising each day.

When strangers hear my crows talk they never fail to ask: "Did you split their tongues?" Certainly not. A crow's tongue is naturally split. It is seemingly loose at both ends and works on a central pivot.

The next question invariably is: "How long does it take to teach one to talk?" I have never been able to make one talk in less than ten months. He will learn to bark like a dog, mew like a cat and jabber a number of unintelligible words, but to pronounce words really clearly takes almost a year. In the meantime, he will be up to all kinds of mischief and will learn some new trick each day, including quite a few things that you do not teach him.

One day I placed a pan, containing several pieces of clothing, on my lawn and went into the house for clothespins. When I returned I found that each piece had been taken from the pan, dragged in the dust and put back into the pan.

Patience is the keynote in teaching crows to talk. Only the clearest pronunciation and the same tone and accent must be used when teaching difficult sentences.

I have spent at least two hours a day saying to my crows words that I wanted them to learn. They would almost fall from the perch and go through the most terrible contortions, twisting their necks as if in agony while trying to say some new word.

When Elephant Is in "Mush"

At certain seasons, domesticated elephants suffer from a disease called "mush," and then become fully as dangerous as the rogue elephant of the jungle. When an elephant is "in mush," a white spot appears on his temple between his eye and his ear where there is a little hole in his head. From this hole, fluid oozes out until the termination of the illness, which is sometimes a matter of 60 or 90 days. An elephant in "mush" suffers such intense pain that its mind is affected.

Mealy Baked Potatoes.—To make baked potatoes dry and mealy, when they are tender put a fork at least twice into each potato to let the steam escape.

Line the Clothes Basket.—Clothes baskets can be kept clean by lining them with washable material, such as oilcloth, muslin, or heavy paper may be used.

Try This and Please Hubby.—A tablespoon of borax in the water in which white collars are washed will take away that ugly yellow tint and make them as white as new.

As You Iron.—Stack your clothes in piles according to the rooms in which they will be put away. Then when you are finished the clothes are sorted and need not be handled twice.

Improving Cookies.—The flavor of cookies is improved and they stay moist longer if one tablespoonful of jam or jelly is added to the cookie dough.

Slow Oven for Sponge Cake.—Sponge and angel-food cakes should be baked in a slow oven so that the air which has been beaten into them has a chance to expand and lighten the cake before the eggs set and give the cake a shape.

Soft Pillows.—One housewife washes all the discarded silken articles of the household, cuts them into tiny pieces and uses them to fill pillows. They are very soft and fluffy, besides costing nothing.

Outdoor Fireplace.—Backyard fireplaces are easily constructed and provide a center for family recreation during summer months; steak roasts, corn roasts, and marshmallow toasts are only a few of the many reasons for building one.

Cream Cheese Substitute.—Cottage cheese may be used in place of cream cheese if it is pressed through a fine sieve to remove the moisture.

JOHN DEERE Side-Delivery Rake

For Making Top-Grade Hay

Because its value is measured chiefly by leafiness and color, hay should be cured and handled the John Deere way—lift it into loose, fluffy windrows with the light-running John Deere Side-Delivery Rake, with self-adjusting floating cylinder, universal joint drive, curved teeth, and inclined frame—then let it air-cure, not sun-bake—and you'll have top-grade hay. Cylinder automatically follows lay of the land with uniform power flow, rakes clean, and floats the hay into windrows. Horse-drawn and tractor-drawn styles.
